

It's The Post That Never Ends

By Marti Abernathey

Published May 8, 2007 | Updated March 31, 2026

https://www.transadvocate.com/its-the-post-that-never-ends_n_105.htm

Abstract

It's such an amazing thing, the transformation of Transadvocate.com. Once a blog of my personal opinions and beliefs, TA has become everything I ever envisioned it to be when I first purchased the domain on March 1st, 2002. There is enough traffic here that many times a good discussion happens without me commenting. Transadvocate.com is [...]

Article

It's such an amazing thing, the transformation of Transadvocate.com. Once a blog of my personal opinions and beliefs, TA has become everything I ever envisioned it to be when I first purchased the domain on March 1st, 2002. There is enough traffic here that many times a good discussion happens without me commenting. Transadvocate.com is slowly becoming more about community, and less about me. Transadvocate/Abnormalheights.org blogger, Autumn Sandeen has amazed me with her thoughtful and in depth posts.

That being said, one post on the TA main page won't seem to die. The post in question is about radical feminism views transgender people. Frankly, the comments in this thread is why I love this space. People are respected, opinions are discussed, and hopefully we all walk away wiser (at the very least, I can say I do).

So in a salute to the post that never ends, I've created a mash of two different versions of "The Song That Never Ends." Enjoy.

song-that-never-ends-remix.mp3

Suggested citation

Marti Abernathey. "It's The Post That Never Ends." TransAdvocate, May 8, 2007.

https://www.transadvocate.com/its-the-post-that-never-ends_n_105.htm